A long time ago in a country far, far away, there was a mama goat who had seven daughters. The whole family lived together in a house which was neither big nor small, on the edge of a wood.

One day the mama goat needed to go to the chemist's to buy cough syrup.

“Don't open the door for anyone, especially not for the big, bad wolf,” she warned her children.

The little goats asked if they could have hot chocolate and doughnuts for breakfast.

“Absolutely not!” said the mother. “First of all, we don’t have any doughnuts. And chocolate is full of sugar. If you eat too much sugar your teeth will fall out.”

The little goats whined in protest, but the mama goat had already left and slammed the door behind her.

A moment later the little goats realized their mother had forgotten her keys.

One of the little goats said:
“If we ate just seven tiny pieces of chocolate, Mum would never know.”
But their mum had left the chocolate on the highest shelf in the kitchen.

So the little goats searched the entire house for a ladder, but they couldn't find one.
